

ABSTRACT

A device for storing and organizing business cards. The device comprises a loop such as a ring and a plurality of 5 protective members, each member defining a hole and comprising two sheets of plastic material. A business card is inserted in the space formed between the two sheets of plastic material either before or after the protective member is retained on the loop. The present invention facilitates the management and 10 access of a plethora of business cards.